Early in the year 1864, the late Bishop Elliott, of Georgia, consecrated to the service of Almighty God, St. Luke's Church, Atlanta, Ga. The church was a most attractive building, handsomely furnished, and although somewhat "Confederate" in style, would compare favorably with most churches built in the days of peace and prosperity. The church was destroyed by fire in "the burning of Atlanta." But two funerals ever took place in St. Luke's, the one that of Stephen Elliott, infant son of Richard Peters, Esq., and that of Bishop Polk, godfather of little Stephen El-So much for history. The story entitled "Nellie Peter's Pocket-Handkerchief," was published in the children's column of the Church Intelligencer. It is as follows:

My dear children-I have a story to tell you, a kind of history of myself, and I shall tell it my own way. I am not very old, hardly half grown, but I joyous and some bad.

My mistress has always taken very great care of me; and when she did not need my company, has provided pretty box, with a number of comamions about my own size.

The first event of importance which I recollect was the baptism of Nellie's little brother. He was a bright, beautiful child, only two months old. The bishop was visiting the family, and as the little babe was to receive his name, while the smoke of the incense ascended he baptised him. It was a very pleasant sight. All the children of the family were present and several friends among band. And this was the prayer-I them a clergyman of the church and a knew it because it was the Fourteenth bishop, who was both a soldier of the cross and of his country.

He was a man of noble presence and I saw from his look and action that he was very much in earnest. He was one of the sponsors, and during the service I could see that his whole soul through Jesus Christ our Lord." was in it. I loved to look in his face, it was so full of goodness and truth. Nellie's mother held the little one in

After the little one was baptised, and so made a member of Christ, a child of God, and an inheritor of the Kingdom of Heaven, an angel, who I had not observed before, bent down and kissed the new-born Christian, and said, with a "still small voice," that was very musical, "Take heed that ye des pise not one of these little ones; for l say unto you that in heaven their angels do always behold the face of my Father which is in heaven;" and then knew that this was little Stephen's guardian angel, and that he had just low begun his appointed work. It was all very pleasant. The service was over and the two bishops kissed the regenerated child, and there was a song s of angels rejoicing and praising God because He had vouchsafed to receive the sweet babe for His own child by adoption and to incorporate him into His holy church.

After this came the beautiful spring time, and the birds sang in the trees, which little by little put forth a foliage of living green. The flowers opene and all nature was glowing with life. I heard a great deal about the war, but

Many hundreds came to take a last look at his beloved features, for all men loved him. Each one felt that he had a part in the great sacrifice of this glorious servant of God, and many ere the tears that coursed down the cheeks of strong men unused to weep. After the service, the minister gave all the congregation an opportunity of passing by the coffin, and the crowd continued to pour up one aisle and down the other, until the very last moment that could be allowed. Not very long after the bishop's death, little Stephen was taken sick. cannot tell with what tender solicitude ie was nursed, nor what fervent prayers were put up in his behalf, but he died: and his guardian angel who had watched over his short earthly life, went with him to the paradise of God, where he would be forever free from sin und sorrow, and forever happy with the angels of God.

"He died ere his expanding soul Had ever burnt with wrong desires, Had ever spurned at heaven's control Or ever quenched its sacred fires."

Nellie's heart was almost broken when her little brother died, and so was taken away from her earthly love but she knew that this love was not wasted, and would not be lost, but that henceforward it would be a bright chain to bind her to her angel brother men doing all they could to destroy God's own house. Hundreds of shot and shell fell all around it, and finally the angels bowed before the altar, and I heard a great crash, and I knew that a shot had gone through the roof, just above where I lay. For days and days together the shell came through the side of the church; and every time the church was struck, the angels looked sad, and bowed their heads at the altar, where they stood. I do not know how long it all lasted, but for many days and nights there was no abatement. At length I saw heard a great crashing noise, and one of the largest shells came tearing through the side of the church and have seen a great many things-some struck the prayer-desk on which the large Bible happened to be lying. The prayer-desk was broken and the Bible fell under it, and quicker than thought the angels took the great Bibleme very comfortable quarters in a very full of "peace and good will towards men"-and placed it just on top of the terrible monster, and it did not ex-unto God's holy name. Early in the morning there came to the church a holy bishop, and with him was the minister of the parish. They looked in wonder at the sight and then everently lifted the Bible back to its place and removed the shell. They athered all the prayer-books they ould find for the soldiers, for they vere missionaries to the army. Then the rector came to Nellie's seat, thinking all the while of the dear friends who had offered up in that place the sacrifice of praise and thanksgiving. He sat down for awhile and thought over the scattered flock and the desoations of God's house. He thought of the hardships of the war, and of the vils which the craft and subtility of the devil and of man was working, and wondered how out of it all God was to oring peace to His people.
